

RETAIL SALES REVENUE SUMMARY

$45.4M

Total Revenue

$378

AOV

120K

No of Orders

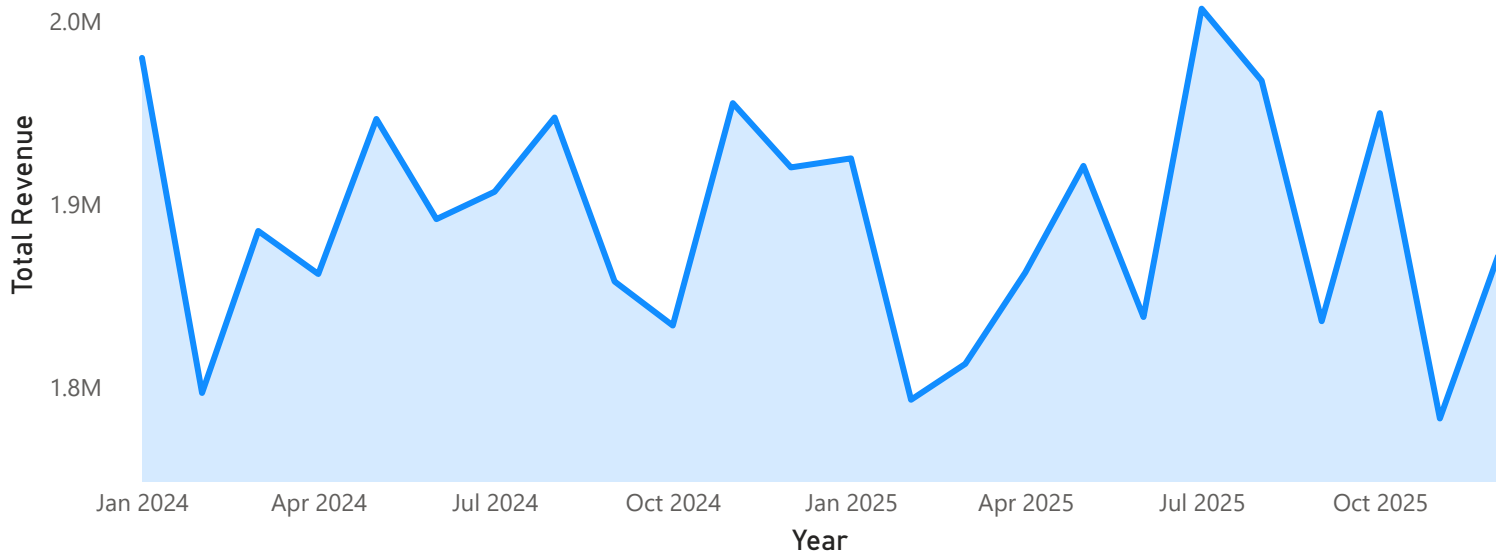

Year

> ☐ 2024

> ☐ 2025

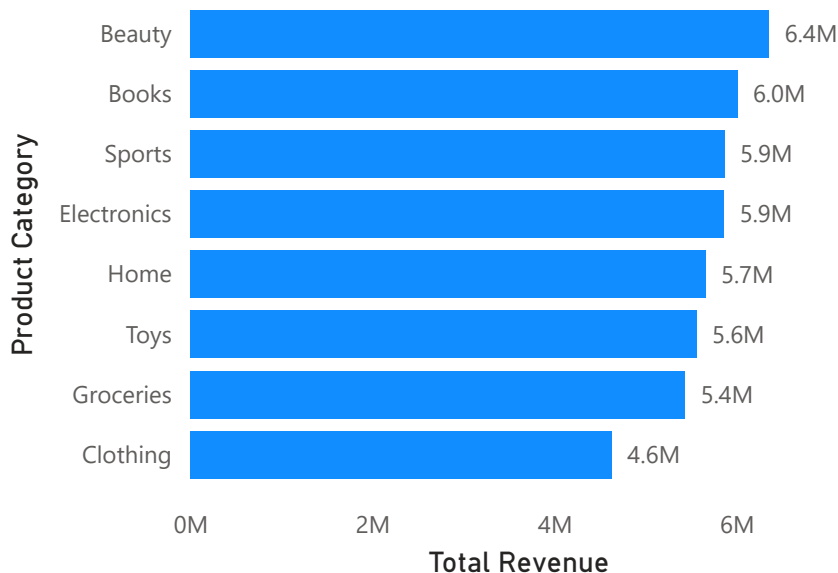

Quarterly Revenue Trend

Revenue declined 0.95% YoY with no seasonal pattern

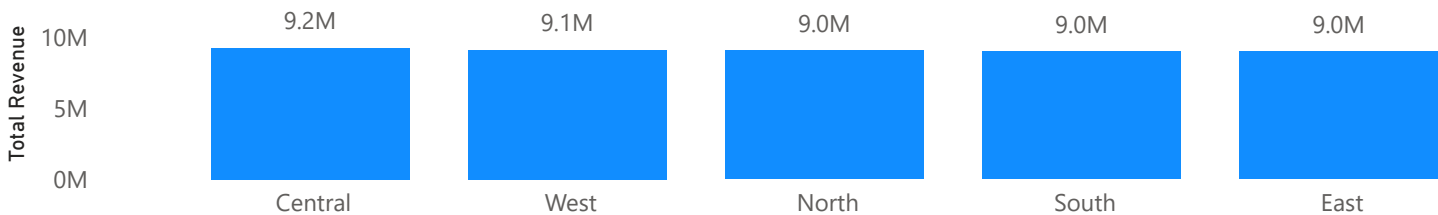

Revenue by product category

Beauty leads at $6.4M while Clothing trails at $4.6M despite highest volume

Revenue by Region

Regional spread is only 3%, no geography stands out

Revenue by Channel

All three channels split revenue evenly, no channel is being optimised

ANALYSIS ON DISCOUNTS OFFERED

2.64M
Cost lost due to discount

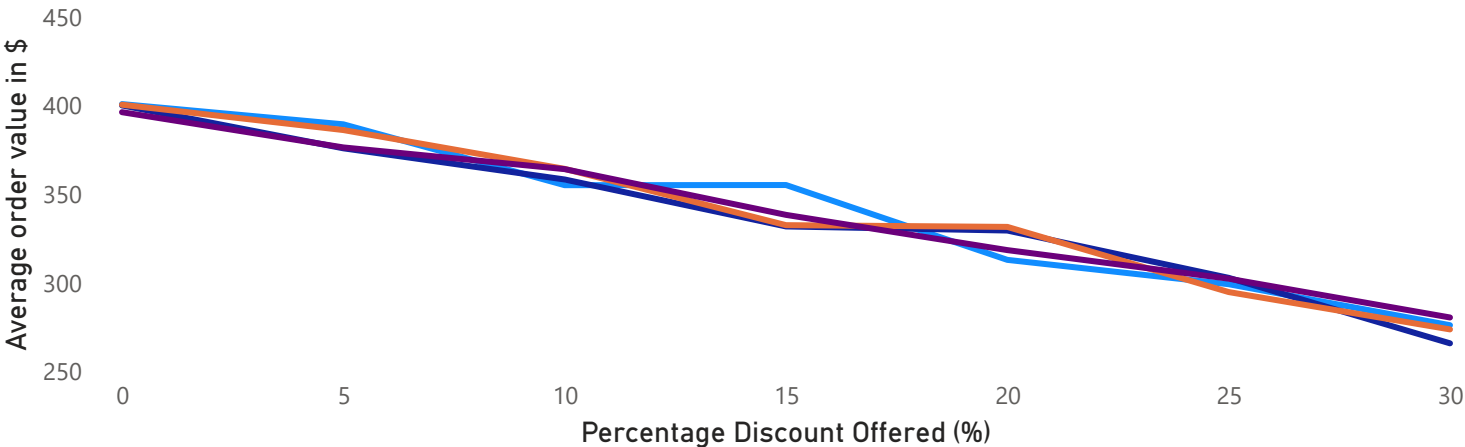

5.50
Average percentage discount offered

Year
> ○ 2024
> ○ 2025

Average Order Value by Discount Offered

Every 5% discount costs $20 in order value with zero volume lift

customer_segment ● Loyal ● New ● Returning ● VIP

Discount distribution

60% of transactions pay full price but the 40% discounted cost us $2.64M

Distribution of AOV, Average discount offered and purchase frequency for each customer segment

customer_segment	AOV	Average discount (%)	Purchase Frequency
Returning	378.92	5.55	1.71
Loyal	379.61	5.52	1.73
VIP	375.90	5.46	1.72
New	377.48	5.46	1.71

1. Across 120,000 transactions and $45.4M in revenue, the company gave away $2.64M in discounts that produced zero incremental volume, applied identical treatment to all customer segments, and saw revenue decline 0.95% year-over-year.
- 2.The purchase frequency analysis revealed that the average customer buys only 1.72 times over two years. This is the single biggest drag on revenue. AOV is a reasonable $378, so the problem isn't how much customers spend per visit, it's that they don't visit again.

Recommendation

1. The company needs to build a genuine tiered experience for its customers. VIPs should get exclusive perks instead of discounts. New customers should get onboarding incentives. Loyal customers should get early access to new products.
2. The company needs a post-purchase re-engagement program: follow-up emails within 7 days of first purchase, a "second purchase" incentive targeted specifically at one-time buyers